

Dear Friends,

After two months in California catching up on rest, seeing family and friends, and taking care of the many details that come with being in the U.S. for a year, my mom and I enjoyed a beautiful two-day drive from California and arrived October 1st in Colorado Springs. It was a wonderful time with Mom driving through glorious countryside in my new car (a 2003 VW Passat, which I am thankful for and enjoying). Mom flew home a couple of days later and last week I began my internship at the Navigator Headquarters.

The purpose statement of the People Resources team where I am interning reads like this: "Through the power and energy of the Holy Spirit, to bring help, hope and healing to enable God's people to maximize their contributions to His Kingdom." My heart rejoices to be here to learn more skills to be able to help others!

The People Resource Team seems to be a pretty special place. My new colleagues have lovingly welcomed me. They pursue biblical community and place a high value on friendship and good relationships among colleagues. You can sure tell!

For example, as a part of the team I was asked to agree to a relational covenant saying I will pursue reconciliation in conflict with teammates, talk directly to the person with whom I have conflict and not talk to others about that person, and hold my other teammates accountable to do this. Helping others work out relational conflict – Relational Healing – is also one of the tools I am getting training in. I am grateful to be working in this environment and anticipating what God wants to do both in my personal life and ministry through it.

Change, change...it continues. Now I have a badge and drive to work three days a week, and sit in an office! Yesterday I moved into a more permanent place for my time here in Colorado Springs. I'm living with a new friend Carolyn, whose husband is away for military training for just my intern time. It will be wonderful to settle into one place for a few months.

If you would like to, here is how you can pray:

1. For continued rest and very good times with Jesus in this time of much transition.
2. That I will be a blessing here at the PRT and to Carolyn.
3. That the Lord will lead me clearly as to where and in what capacity He wants me to minister in the future.

Thanks for your emails and calls and prayer. I am so grateful for your support and friendship.

With love in Christ,
Kelley
